The George Washington Bridge was the world's longest suspension bridge when it opened in 1931. It spans the Hudson River between upper Manhattan, and Fort Lee, NJ. It was originally designed to be sheathed in granite, but with the onset of the Depression, the steel was left exposed.

I was walking in the park along the New Jersey Palisades on a gray day, but for the watercolor, I intensified the fog effect to accent the Little Red Lighthouse. – N.R.
